

MUSICAL AND DRAMATIC.

"Hamlet" and "Richard III" at the Chesnut Street Theatre. The performance of "Hamlet" was performed on Tuesday night at the Chesnut Street Theatre to a large audience...

The City Amusements. At the Chesnut Street Theatre, the drama of "The Great City" will be presented this evening. At the Arch Street Theatre, the drama of "The Emerald Pool" will be presented this evening.

Without undertaking the, at this late day, useless task of giving a close criticism of Mr. Davenport's "Hamlet," it may not be amiss for us to make a few comments upon two important points...

Another point is that none of the representations of "Hamlet" sufficiently mark the "antic disposition" which was the sign of the real or pretended madness of the former. In the very first scene after the interview with the "Ghost," "Ophelia" tells her father how "Hamlet" appeared to her...

Professor Rufus Adams.—This gentleman, who is so well-known in our city as an able and experienced teacher of elocution, we are gratified to notice, has lately appeared in his hitherto accustomed role of an actor. He appeared as "Shylock" at the Amateurs' Drawing Room, on the 13th inst.—a part in which he had previously made a favorable impression at the Arch Street Theatre...

ing, as favorable as could have been expected from an amateur troupe. Professor Adams, we learn, will appear again shortly at the Amateurs' Drawing Room, and soon afterwards at the Arch Street Theatre, in a new role, when his numerous friends and admirers will have another opportunity of testifying in a suitable manner both their respect and appreciation of his historic efforts.
